DESCRIPTION:

The two-story brick house is located on the north side of Jefferson Street between North Washington and North Castle Streets. The facade has two bays with segmental arched door and window openings. The door is a modern replacement but the original transom bar with carved moldings is still in place. The steps to the entrance are missing. The raised basement has an arched window opening and is defined by a projecting brick belt course. The boarded first story window opening is large, probably originally having a pair of windows. The sill is stone. The upper story windows are one-over-one. Molded brick belt courses define the sill and lintel of the first story and the center bar of the second story. The wood cornice tops two courses of angled brick. Fleur-de-lis perforations and small brackets are continuous in the entire row of houses.

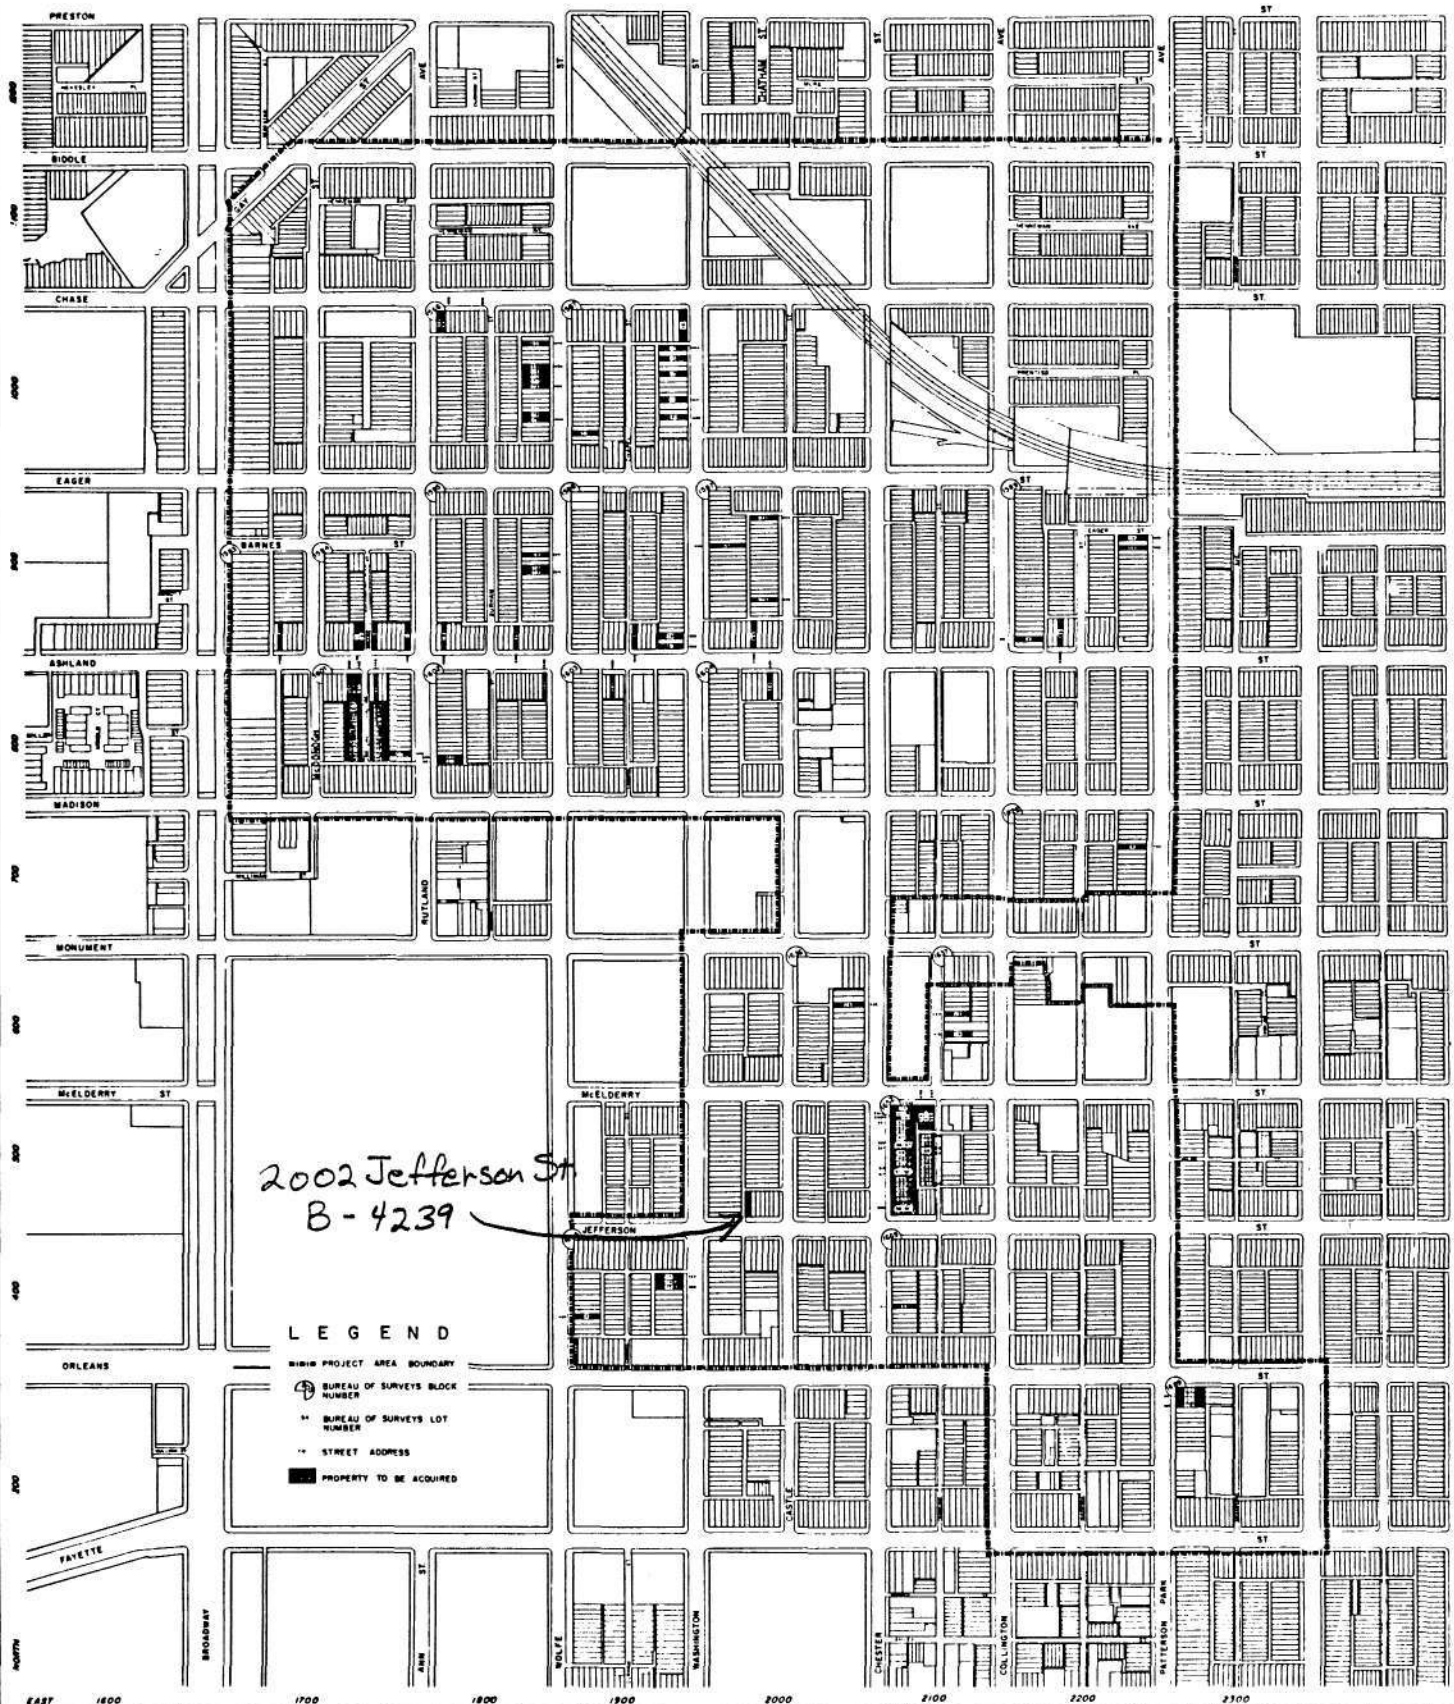

SIGNIFICANCE:

AREA: Architecture LEVEL: Local

The house at 2002 Jefferson Street is a contributing building in an undefined historic district in the vicinity east of Johns Hopkins Hospital. The district is significant for its rowhouse architecture of the late nineteenth century. The area exemplifies the housing boom in that period which resulted in solidly middle class, largely immigrant neighborhoods, such as East Baltimore, which was heavily German-American. The houses were simple, but with integral decorative details, as shown in 2002 Jefferson.
